

Community Advocate Training

What is the Labour Community Advocate Training program?

Members are trained as Union Counsellors to help with other members' problems in a respectful, understanding and confidential manner.

Union Counsellors connect members with the appropriate community services and agencies for help with their particular problem.

Union Counsellors are then available to provide ongoing support and follow up with the members.

Why be a Labour Community Advocate?

Get members the help they need.

Help strengthen the local by being a member that is involved.

Be part of a national network of Union activists and staff who work with our partner, the United Way to support community services and agencies through advocacy.

Where: Red Deer

When: June 20th – 24th, 2016
